Wednesday, October 15 | 12:00-1:15 pm
Tisch Library, Room 304

READING CAMUS during the WEST AFRICAN EBOLA OUTBREAK: an anthropological reflection

ADIA BENTON
Assistant Professor of Anthropology
Brown University

Adia Benton is a medical anthropologist with several years' experience in Sierra Leone. She has worked and conducted research in global health since 2000, on topics that include infectious diseases, gender-based violence, HIV/AIDS, and post-conflict development. She is the author of HIV Exceptionalism: Development through Disease in Sierra Leone (University of Minnesota, 2015).

This event forms part of Tufts’ One Health series on Ebola. Co-sponsored by the Department of Anthropology, Department of Romance Languages, Community Health Program, International Relations Program, and the Consortium of Studies in Race, Colonialism, and Diaspora.