The committee met four times during the academic year and also conducted business by email.

The committee evaluates the credentials of faculty who have not previously taught at Tufts and evaluates proposed courses. Very important to this evaluation is the judgment of the committee and Sean Recroft, the Summer Session manager, as to whether a course will have sufficient enrollment. The cancellation of a course because of low enrollment causes significant inconvenience to both students and faculty.

A problem arose because of the implementation of DARS. DARS cannot handle course numbers approved solely by the Summer Session Committee. Therefore, any new courses in summer will be given special topics numbers.
