Nahuatl Language Revitalization in Mexican Higher Education: the IDIEZ project

John Sullivan, Ph.D.
Universidad de Zacatecas, México

Monday, November 15th
4:30-5:45 p.m.
Tisch 316

Dr. Sullivan is the director of the Zacatecas Institute for Teaching and Learning in Ethnology, a Mexican non-profit that is working to ensure the preservation of both Classical and Modern Nahuatl, the language of the Aztecs that is still spoken by about 1.5 million people in Mexico today. He will discuss programs for indigenous college students as well as efforts to create linguistic tools for the study of Nahuatl.

For information: contact: anne.cantu@tufts.edu

Sponsored by the Department of Romance Languages, the Latin American Studies Program, the Toupin Fund and the Dean of Academic Affairs