Antebellum Americans believed that the vast majority of the world was hell-bound. How did that affect their view of themselves and their place in the world? And could hell be used for social justice as well as social control? This talk looks at the religio-racial implications of belief in hell in the new nation.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 18
12:00-1:15 pm | Eaton 206

Co-sponsored by the Department of Religion; Consortium of Studies in Race, Colonialism, and Diaspora; American Studies program; Africana Studies program; and the SPIRIT Fund