

The Department of Political Science and the Department of Classics

Present a

Frank C. Colcord Lecture

Hugh Liebert

Assistant Professor of American politics, policy, and strategy

Department of Social Sciences

United States Military Academy

Monday, April 14, 2014

Noon, Braker Hall, Room 001

Is There a 'World Elsewhere'?

The Soldier, the State, and Some Version of Coriolanus

Coriolanus is famous for having served, abandoned, attacked, and reprieved Rome. Since antiquity his story has illustrated how civil orders both require and fear military men. However, the way in which Coriolanus' story has been told has changed significantly. Liebert examines three Coriolani: those of Plutarch's Life, Shakespeare's play, and Fiennes' movie to consider what they can teach us about the perennial nature and the present state of civil-military relations.

Pizza will be served.